

I wanted to let you know about a historic worldwide event which will be happening next Saturday, October 24th.

The International Day of Climate Action will cover almost every country on earth and be the most widespread day of climate change action in the planet's history. There will be big rallies in big cities, and incredible creative actions across the globe: mountain climbers on our highest peaks with banners, underwater demonstrations in island nations threatened by sea level rise, churches and mosques and synagogues and ashrams engaged in symbolic action, star athletes organizing mass bike rides—and hundreds upon hundreds of community events to raise awareness of the need for urgent action.

Every event will highlight the number 350 and people will gather at some point for a big group photo depicting that all-important message. At 350.org, all the photos will be assembled to make a gigantic, global, visual petition. In addition, photos will be broadcast on the 24th at Times Square and the UN Headquarters, and will appear in newspapers large and small.

October 24th comes six weeks before the crucial UN Climate Negotiations in Copenhagen this December. Copenhagen may well be the pivotal moment that determines whether or not we get the planet out of the climate crisis, and your actions on October 24 will help our leaders realize we need a real solution that pays attention to the science.

This is your invitation to take part in the biggest day in climate change action history. I hope you will join me in showing your support for a safe climate future.
